Festival of the Month- June

'Lajkonik' Festival, Krakow, Poland

According to Polish legend, when the head of Krakow's defensive raftsmen defeated a Tatar marauder in the 13th century, he slipped into the Mongolian's robes and triumphantly rode into the city. The folkloric myth has been celebrated for more than 200 years with the procession of 'Lajkonik' through the Gothic city. Clad in Mongol robes, the fairytale figure rides a hobbyhorse topped with peacock feathers, accompanied by the Mlaskoty musical troupe.

The pageant proceeds from the Premonstratensian Convent in the suburb of Zwierzyniec to the main square, where the mayor greets Lajkonik and presents him with a symbolic ransom and a goblet of wine. En route, the energetic larrikin dances, jumps, greets passers-by, pops into cafés, collects donations and strikes people with his mace (it's said to bring good luck).
